Getting the Most Out of the Career Fair

Before the Career Fair

- Register for the career fair on Handshake or the career fair website.
- Make a list of companies that are coming to the fair that interest you.
- Research company information to develop intentional conversations and engagement.
- Visit Business Career Center Services in Rawls 3029 to ensure a well-crafted complete resume.
- Practice your 30-second commercial or elevator pitch.
- If possible attend information sessions, preparation nights, or mock career fairs for additional practice.
- Dress and present yourself professionally.

Elevator Pitch (a.k.a. 30-second commercial)

- Highlight your strengths and skills in an effective and concise manner within a period it takes to ride to your destination on an elevator.
- Share who you are, what you are seeking, and why you are capable of performing within the role/industry/organization of interest.
- Maintain eye contact with the employers and speak confidently and clearly.
- Be clear on what you are looking for or hoping to gain by speaking with the organization.
- Create multiple versions of your elevator pitch for various opportunities.
- Practice in a mirror or with a friend. Be comfortable with what you plan to say.

At the Fair

- Have enough copies of your resume to distribute to companies.
- Take a warm-up lap and get to know where organizations are located.
- Deliver your elevator pitch!
- Remain professional when talking with professionals, recruiters, and peers.
- Show interest in organizations that you are talking with, even if they were not on your list.
- Build your professional network by conversing with professionals at companies that interest you and any company that shows interest in you. Ask for a business card!

After the Fair

- Follow-up with companies and/or contacts within 24 hours of interaction to reinforce connection and interest.
- Be sure to follow any steps that recruiters recommended.
- Connect with newly created or formerly established contacts on LinkedIn.

Professional Dress and Presence

First Impressions

Statistically, it takes 30 seconds to make a first impression. You want it to be positive! Ensure attire is laundered, wrinkle-free, and well-fitting. Be mindful of appropriate length and fit of sleeves, pant legs, and skirts.

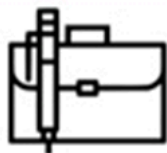

Be Yourself

Although several color variations and patterns of suits, blouses, collar shirts, dresses, skirts, slacks, and blazers is often acceptable, choose wisely and strategically based on industry, while embracing authenticity.

Accessories

Invest in the following accessories and practice formalities:

- | | |
|------------------------------------|------------------------------|
| 1) Resumes printed on resume paper | 6) Customized business cards |
| 2) Nametag placed on right side | 7) Watch |
| 3) Leather padfolio | 8) Belt |
| 4) Professional bag/satchel | 9) Confident eye contact |
| 5) Comfortable, dress shoes | 10) Smile! |

Grooming

Hair and head coverings are representative of a variety of lengths, styles, textures, colors, and cultures. Ensure cleanliness in preparation for professional engagement.

The Benefits of an Internship

Internships can increase your chances of a full-time offer by 85%!

Students with at least one paid internship made $15,000 - $20,000 more in their starting salary than those with no internship experience!

The value of an internship is straightforward. You can test drive potential careers while getting paid for it! They can help gauge if a company or industry is right for you. Most importantly, you will be more valuable in the eyes of employers by graduation which will hopefully lead to a higher starting salary. Internships may seem to be out of reach, but there are a TON of opportunities; you just need to know how to find them.

Do you want to test drive the job you are wanting after graduation?

Do you want to get paid more than you did at your high school summer job?

Do you want to catch the eye of employers early on?

If you said yes to any of these, then this guide is here to help YOU! Feel free to read it all at once or in parts as you go through the hiring process. This is completely at your pace and will hopefully lead to real-world experience that will expand your future opportunities.

Disclaimer:

It is impossible for me to guarantee that you will get an internship by using this guide. However, I can assure you that you will learn about the entire process and will set yourself up for future success. Additionally, internships are only one of many ways to prepare for future recruiting success along with studying abroad, part time jobs, personal research/projects, and many other activities! Everyone follows their own unique path, and you can only truly fail if you stop trying.

Roadmap to Success

Success!

Find internships you are mostly qualified for and interested in!

Apply to as many internships as you

If you aren't getting interview offers,
revise your resume!

Continue steps 3 - 4 until you get an interview!

Research the company, the interviewer, and the job position!

Continue to apply to other roles while you're going through interviews

Interview for the job and show off your personality!

Reflect on your interview etiquette, answers, and company fit!

Decide on the offer or continue to repeat the steps above until you get the right offer

Resume

Your resume's one job is to get you to the interview stage of the hiring process. It is the recruiter's first look at who you are, and it is incredibly important to have a great first impression. Resume templates are very standardized, which means that the uniqueness is within the details you share! The Daniel's School of Business resume template can be found here.

Your unique experiences, clubs, and interests are what will make you stand out! It is perfectly fine to add high school experiences, especially as a lowerclassman. Any of your past experiences, commitments, and interests are crucial to showing what makes you, YOU. Your goal is to fill as much of a single page as possible without going over!

TIP: Add an obscure interest or experience so interviewers will ask about it! You can even have a short story prepared to share about the unique item during interviews!

Resume Do's

- Include any job-specific projects, experiences, or clubs
- Frame bullet points as Power Verb + Action + Result like seen here
- Use at least one quantifiable metric in bullet points when possible
- Be able to talk about any experience on your resume in more detail
- Make sure your grammar, format, and spelling are correct and consistent
- Organize your most recent experiences first by category

Resume Don'ts

- Write more than one page of information
- Overuse filler words or fluff to decrease white space (A/And/Then)
- Include obvious skills (MS Office Suite, Communication, Attention to detail)
- Oversell experience to an unreal extent
- Neglect extracurriculars, clubs, or interests that you are passionate about

Cover Letter

A cover letter is meant to be a more personalized message to the recruiter. It shouldn't include information from your resume and should be a short, high-level view of what the recruiter should know about you. The act of submitting a cover letter will show additional effort and make an even better first impression. There is an example of a real resume and cover letter on the following pages!

{Insert Date}

Dear {Company Name} talent recruiter,

I am writing to you for your Supply Chain Operations Internship for the summer of 2023. I am applying because I believe that with my project management background, I will be able to fulfill your vision to keep the world moving!

As an ambitious Sophomore at Purdue University's School of Management, I am pursuing a double major in Management and Finance. Currently, I hold a 3.87 GPA. During my last internship at AssuredPartners, I worked on a data analytics project designed to implement benchmarking capabilities within the company's agency management system. Through this, I earned experience in the following:

- Managing large data sets with excel functions
- Market and financial analysis
- Project management
- Leadership
- Communication

I believe in treating every opportunity as a learning opportunity and have worked to develop myself professionally and personally during my time at Purdue. As a club president and a management ambassador, I have furthered my soft skills such as interpersonal communication, time management, problem-solving abilities, and empathy for others.

I strive to leave an impact on the business world and an opportunity at Genuine Parts Company would be the first step. Thank you for your time and consideration.

Sincerely,

Aubrey DeVries

Application

There are two steps to every application - finding the opportunity and applying. There are three main ways to find internship opportunities: Online, Personal Network, and Career Fairs.

Finding the Best Opportunities

Online

You can search for internships by name, location, and experience through online sites like LinkedIn, Google Jobs, or Indeed. Many of these sites have automated application processes which makes applying a click of a button away.

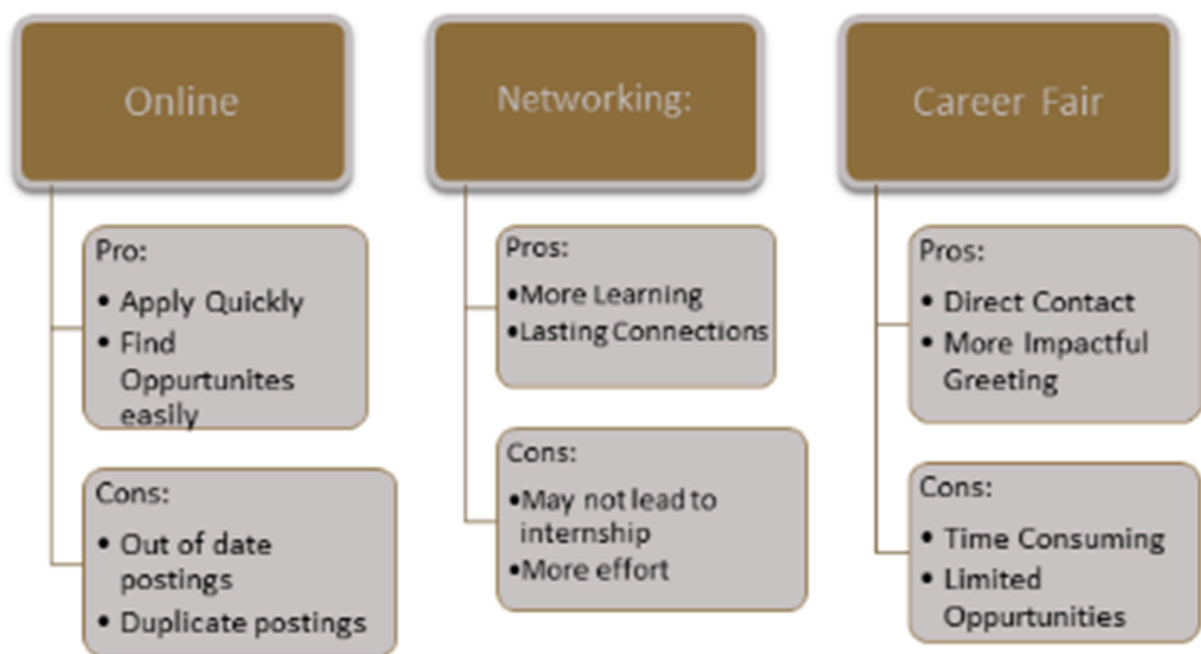

Networking

You should think of this as relationship building! Networking can be as simple as reaching out to family or friends. Many alumni are more than willing to answer career/position-focused questions. It's important to think of networking as learning opportunities rather than an internship hunt. A quick thirty-minute phone call getting to know someone can lead to an internship recommendation at their company later on! When searching for individuals to connect with, you can search up alumni by their role here. An email or LinkedIn message is a great way to start these connections!

Career fair

There is a business-specific career fair every semester where you can talk directly to recruiters and hand out your resume! This allows you to not only see which companies have opportunities available, but also make a more personal connection with the recruiter. I'd highly recommend going to any and all career fairs in order to get comfortable in the environment, learn about company opportunities, and get introduced to recruiters early on.

I have successfully gotten internships through all three of these methods and each has pros and cons (These are outlined on next page). I would recommend taking advantage of each one at the same time while searching for your next internship to maximize your chances of success!

TIP: You can expand your search by looking at related career fields that may not be an exact match but can provide equivalent experience! Sales and Marketing, Finance and Accounting, & HR and Management are all pairs that can go hand and hand!

Applying

Nearly every application is the same and you will often be able to automatically fill in the required information using your resume. However, getting an internship is a numbers game which means the more applications you fill out, the more likely it is you will get an internship. Luckily, there are shortcuts you can take that decrease the time it takes to apply. Autofill using LinkedIn or your resume whenever possible and use CTRL-C/V for longer answers. Personalize your resume or cover letter in ways that can be done quickly. You can use copy and paste for the company's name and values which can be found through a quick google search! Every job posting will have qualifications defining what candidate the company is looking for. This can include past experience, graduation year, software competency, and many other things. I personally only care about skill-based qualifications as long as I fit at least one and I can learn the others. I don't care about graduation year, years of experience, or anything else. As an intern, you aren't expected to have much past experience since you're so new to the workforce. Additionally, I think graduation year requirements are counterproductive especially when study plans are so customizable.

The Golden Rule: You should always keep applying to as many internships as possible. If you aren't hearing back at all, your resume may need work.

Interviewing

The interview is for BOTH you and the interviewer to gauge if you will be a good personality fit for the company and role. It is important to research the type of work you'd be doing and the values of the company so that you can highlight your compatible skills!

Types of Interviews

The number of interviews can vary from company to company.

Phone Interview

Most organizations start with a phone interview. These conversations are to tell you more about the role however they may ask one or two behavioral questions. These are very short lasting between 15-30 minutes usually.

Second Round Interview

The next round will be an in-person or online video call with another recruiter. It is best practice to find a quiet area and wear professional clothing to have a great first impression. You will be asked more behavioral questions about your past experiences and activities.

Interview round 3+/Final

The number of interviews varies by company, but I have found that it is most common to have a third and final interview! The final interview is essentially the same as the second, but you will be interviewed by individuals you'll be working directly with. This interview is just as important for you because you need to think about if your interviewer is someone you would like to work with!

NOTE: Some larger companies will have you travel to their HQ to interview which is a strong signal that they want you.

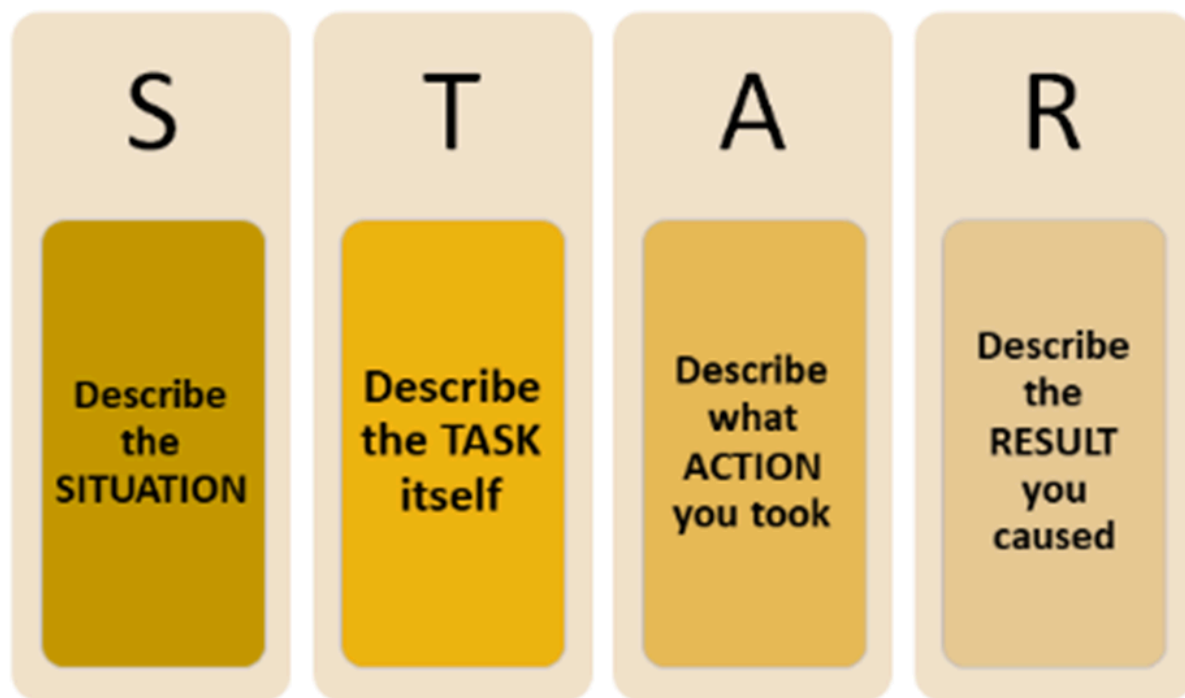

Making a Connection

The best interviews are the ones that feel like normal conversations where you make a personal connection with the interviewer. I personally try and research the interviewer on LinkedIn or the company's website to find possible connections I should "naturally" mention. This can help you prepare personal questions about experiences they've had that you'd like to learn about in more detail. For example, I've emphasized my role leading a 5k for JDRF when I saw my interviewer posted about it many years prior. This commonality shifted the conversation into informal dialogue.

Common Questions

It is also important to prepare answers for common questions you will be asked without sounding rehearsed in the actual interview. A vast majority of interviews will ask you the same behavioral questions which allows you to find the best answers beforehand. I found it helpful to physically write out answers which gave me the ability to adjust them to generally fit the STAR method. It's important to not memorize your written answers and instead use them as a rough outline that can be used dynamically in each interview. I've listed some of the most common interview questions below.

1. Could you tell me a little bit about yourself?
2. Why did you decide to go to Purdue and study [Insert your major]?
3. Tell me about a time you had unclear instructions.
4. Why are you interested in this position/company?
5. Tell me a little bit about [Insert experience on resume].
6. What are your top 3 weaknesses/strengths?
7. Tell me about a time you had competing priorities.
8. What sets you apart from the other talented candidates?
9. Tell me about a time you had a challenge while working in a team setting.
10. Do you have any questions for me?

Decision

Congratulations!! You have successfully gone through the entire hiring process! You may even be fortunate enough to have to decide between multiple offers. Some important things to consider are pay, location, weekly hours, and the work itself. If your internship is a certain distance from your home, many companies will provide housing/moving stipends or pay for housing entirely. You'll have to decide what is most important to you at the time!

For example, if you have an offer for less pay, the work may be more interesting, the location may be nicer, or you may be able to work more hours overall. Your choice is highly personal, and you especially need to think about what is important to you when making it. One thing to remember is that paid work experience in a related role can be just as beneficial as an unpaid internship!
